Citizens group wants to ban private marijuana sales Roughly 8,000 Colorado residents who suffer from chronic conditions are now registered with a federally approved doctor who can recommend them medical marijuana. Photo by David Zalubowski/AP, Stem. Americans for Safe Access, a national advocacy group for medical marijuana patients, is now petitioning the federal government to ban all private drug sales. Americans for Safe Access (ASA), which currently works to protect medical marijuana access for patients in 23 states, has already submitted nearly 100,000 signatures from Colorado and California to the federal Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), the State Department of Justice and the Department of Health and Human Services. If the petitioners gather the necessary signatures, the federal government would have 60 days to respond to their petition. If the DEA or State Department of Justice does not take action, the petitioners would have 30 days to respond to the petition. "We're very hopeful," said ASA Executive Director Steph Sherer. "The government may decide to act right away. But there's a chance they won't." The DEA already granted state-authorized doctors the ability to issue medical marijuana recommendations on an emergency basis on July 23, 2011. But individuals can now buy medical marijuana in 34 states, 11 of which are in the Northeast, the Midwest and the West. Colorado and California are the only two states with legalized recreational marijuana. Colorado's medical marijuana law allows people with one of 26 specified health conditions to purchase a limited supply of marijuana from state-licensed stores. Each individual with a state-approved diagnosis is allowed to grow a maximum of six plants. But a marijuana patient who grows more than the minimum amount of plant material would be required to pay a $100 registration fee and be subject to extensive inspections of the marijuana plants to ensure they are free of mold, pests and disease. Colorado's law is considered fairly lenient compared to California, which does not have a state-licensed medical marijuana program. The California Bureau of Cannabis Control recently advised its license holders not to grow any marijuana plants from a rented or leased property, because of the possibility that the property owner would use the plants for recreational purposes. Sherer and other ASA advocates believe that individual Colorado medical marijuana card holders should be allowed to purchase marijuana for personal use, just as alcohol and tobacco are sold in retail stores. Hope it works for you! Pages Saturday, September 2, 2015 Stardust Trail My friend, Trina, has been dropping into my town for a few years now to hang out and play movies. Recently, she dropped in with her boyfriend and I went. It was one of those first impressions kind of things, where you quickly get to know someone when you've been in their house once. Like they're a hard ass, mean as hell, nice as a button, the kind of person you'd be like "Ya. I don't know who this is, but he's cool." But that kind of person you'd meet only once (honestly, for most people, that's once and then you're out) and then she's back. So this guy was the only person she'd been with that I'd seen before. She doesn't just get to know me because I'm cool or nice. The whole she's here to hang out with is what she's there for, and I remember her telling me she'd only had one other boyfriend. I don't know what happened to him (if it did, she didn't tell me), but this was her last run with someone she was "serious" with. It lasted two months, but for whatever reason, it just didn't work. And this is her past now, out of the way, so she could just be with a new guy. And then we talked about how all the trees were glowing from the lightening... and then I saw her friend, Jen, walking to her car. And I couldn't look away. She's a beautiful little brun
