Could you tell me the difference between direkte and konsequent? I don't understand the sentences: Und es besteht kein Zweifel, dass das direkte Ziel... and Und es besteht kein Zweifel, dass das konsequent Ziel... A: 1) Direkte is used for a goal which is directed at, or comes from, a person. This person may be the subject of the verb, or a subjunctive object, but it must be a person. You wouldn't say "direkte Unternehmensziel". 2) Konsequent is a set of actions which follow one another in time, without a break. Konsequent is used in the past. This can be used for a goal, or a problem/situation, but the difference is that a goal would be something like "das Direktleben". This doesn't mean that "das Direkte" is wrong, it is just that "das Direkte" has a slightly different meaning than "das Direktleben", even though "das Direktleben" can be translated into "das konsequente". If you have a general question on how to know which one to use, ask in the comments below. But here's a short list of possible use cases. 1) "Das ist die direkte Lösung des ca3bf1094

Category:Autodesk Category:Autodesk softwareWales and the World The Day the Tree Fall – Better than Bollywood? The Day the Tree Fall, by Sallie Smith, is at the centre of an international literary phenomenon. Published in September 2011, it features a cataclysmic disaster on a London street, and the world suddenly learns the true identity of a fifty-something former Guardian columnist. The plot is a mixture of Sallie's own history, and the true story of a sister and brother who were her neighbours when she wrote the book. In the United Kingdom, the book has been a popular bestseller, and has been translated into 13 languages, with a reported 28 million copies sold. Sales of The Day the Tree Fall in the US have been sluggish, however, and the publisher is now planning to bring out a re-released book under a different title – perhaps better known in the US as the
