I hope by the time I'm old I will finally understand what it is. A big part of aging sucks. You don't realize it until you lose something you love or it has more of an impact on you than you thought it would. I have that with family. When you live next door to someone all your life, you think you know a lot about them. As time goes on, even if you like them as a person, there might be something about them that aggravates you, and your opinion on that grows more and more negative. It's hard to find a place when you've lost that. I used to have that with my family...the day my mom passed, I changed. It is the same thing with my oldest sister and I. Now that I am 29, I haven't had a moment like that, and it's weird because my mom was only 26 when she died. It's tough to imagine the impact a death like that would have when you are a teenager. All I can do is look forward and not let those moments on the outside erode my relationship with people on the inside. I still have a relationship with both of my sisters, although I'm sure it won't be the same one it once was. Even though I'm one of those extreme personalities that has only friends, I still think relationships change for everyone. It's just my age caught up to my slowing brain!Q: How to debug border in Eclipse when using JFace dialogs? I have an Eclipse RCP project with JFace dialogs for File choosing with a custom
