I like it because it's not sexualized, and it reminds me of something that is very honest. This word does tend to stick in the air though. If you say it's something of a male thing of non-sexual side, a guy will reply that this is an extension of his street credibility. Or something like that, I can't recall what was said exactly, but it was a type of statement like "we are all b-boys." I don't really agree with that. When I say b-boy I mean a person who dances and jumps around and does a lot of stuff that you, the b-girl, approve of. I feel as though it's nothing about "street cred" or anything like that. The only thing that I want to make clear is that, yes, I enjoy being a b-boy, and if I am ever to be the center of attention it will only be because I am doing something on stage and I am being scored on it. B-boys tend to be the ones that are most well-known to the general public. For example, Michael Jackson was a b-boy.
