In the center of the tale lies as it is today a fair-haired man.Q: How to improve performance of this code So here's a basic pagination example. Users can select a certain number of records to sort by and show. The table I'm using has about 200 rows of data in it. I was just wondering if anyone knew of any way I could make the code faster. I have about 10 variables that must be updated which makes it a bit slow on each page load. I used: if($results == 1){ $start = 0; $end = $results; }else{ $start = ($page * $records - $records); $end = ($page * $records) + $records; } Which works really well, but I still find it slow. It's made bigger by the fact that sometimes users will want to change the variables they want to be sorted by. I've also noticed that some pages will load faster than others because of the time it takes to sort the database records. I'm pretty sure there's a better way of doing all of this, but I just can't think of it.

Logged Sometimes I wonder if the world is being run by smart people who are putting us on or imbeciles who really mean it! Mark Twain What is the story of Pentheus here, anyway? From mythus.org: "Pentheus, king of Thebes, seeks to escape the spirit of Dionysus, while his stepmother Agave (who was formerly his wife) seeks to remain a devotee of Dionysus. At Dionysus' instigation, a Satyr arrives, who challenges Pentheus to a contest of wrestling. The Satyr wins and forces Pentheus to dance like a beast. Because of his disloyalty to Dionysus, Pentheus is doomed to die by the falling of a cliff. I use the example of Pentheus to remind the reader that the word, "church" comes from the word "cosmos." Early Christians believed that it was their job to make themselves into a kind of cosmic being. This is why all of the d0c515b9f4
